Our Mission:

Pine Lake, as the environmental campus of Hartwick College, plays an integral role in the larger campus. It is a place to live with and learn from nature; a site where the entire community of learners will study and use the environment in ways that sustain rather than deplete resources; and a place where collaborative learning connects the environment to the curricular and co-curricular life of the College as well as the lives of individual students, faculty, staff, and community residents.

HARTWICK'S PINE LAKE ENVIRONMENTAL CAMPUS, acquired in 1971, promotes sustainability education, research, and outreach in a setting that reflects environmental stewardship and integrates lessons and experiences among all at Hartwick College and in the regional community. The faculty and students conducts research, educational programs, and runs workshops focused on environmental and sustainability studies. Much of the research is done from the Robert R. Smith Biological Field Station at Pine Lake Environmental Campus, where 35 students reside each year in a unique living-learning community.

Community Partnerships:

Your contribution allows Hartwick College and the Pine Lake Campus to continue building strong relationships with the regional community. Activities include hosting internationally and regionally respected scholars, scientists, musicians, artists, and others interested in sharing their knowledge, passion, and creativity, including:

- Partnerships with local K-12 public schools
- energy conservation initiatives
- education initiatives with Riddell State Park
